Hi Jackie

No I definitely want you to ask questions. This looks very good so far. I am attaching the author guidelines. This is what you need to do....

Have the authors send their articles to you for a first read. I would ask to have them by April 15th - you actually more time but people will take all the time you give them. If you think the article looks good - send to me and I will read it. If it is OK to go - we will have them put the article into the EVISE system. You can upload your interview with David into the system as well.

For a policy article - why don't you contact Jo Ann Webb. I would give her the right of first refusal to author an article. If she does not want to do it, ask her for suggestions. She is AONE policy director.

You might want to challenge your team to write an article --- yes it is fine for one of them to be from your facility. Most editors do this.

We can talk more at AONE. Remember as I told you, I always have unsolicited articles in line for an issue so don't panic if you fall a little short.

Jo Ann, glad to hear and I am attaching the information for authors that can provide more information. Please send me your topic ideas as soon as you are able as I will be finishing the content for the issue and submitting for final approval. The article itself is not due to me until the end of May for first review. Again, thank you in advance and we are looking forward to hearing from you re: nursing and advocacy, especially for young leaders...Thanks so much!

Best,

Jackie

Jo Ann,

By way of introduction, I am on the Editorial Board of Nurse Leader and am guest editor for the October issue for 2017. I thought this would be a spectacular year, and never more needed, to ask you to consider writing an article for this issue somewhere along the lines of "The Influence of Nursing on Healthcare Policy" or please suggest any other topic that you think would be most relevant. In these challenging days that lay ahead, what should the message be to Nurse Leaders that is actionable?

If you do not have time, I certainly understand, but value your thoughts/ideas/suggestions greatly.

Please let me know your interest and I would be happy to talk further.

Thank you so much!

Jackie
